At midnight the following night "A" & "B" Companies attacked the German line on the Ginchy-Morval road and their objectives reached, taken, and held despite several strong enemy counter attacks, but at a cost as they sustained 165 mixed casualties. Following the battalions relief it took up support positions between Wedge and Leuze Woods until 15 September when the battalion moved forward for another attack which was launched on the enemy down the north west side of Bouleaux Wood at 1340 hours. Formed on 12 April 1916 the 695th Mechanical Transport Company, Army Service Corps served primarily in the Makina area of Mesopotamia as a Line of Communication unit, and was quite a comprehensive formation being a Motor Transport Base Depot, Base Motor Transport Stores and Advanced Motor Transport Stores. Unlike most similar units of the then Royal Army Service Corps which were quite quickly disbanded post Great War the company remained on strength until 31 March 1920. The following newspaper extract from the Bury St. Edmund's Free Press was kindly sent to us by Major (Retd) S. Hill in 2001, when he learned of our then embryonic 'Dover Project,' for which needless to say we are most grateful. He also said that Charles's died of Sunstroke, but we have not personally sighted his Death Certificate or Casualty Card, however it should be added that all information tendered by our 'Suffolk contact' has always been right:-

"It is with no small measure of regret that we have to record the death of Private Charles Joseph Crepin, a well known and esteemed townsman of Bury. The deceased soldier's wife, who resides at 61 Queen's Road, received the distressing intelligence on Wednesday evening that her husband passed away on August 28thg, succumbing to an attack of heat stroke in Mesopotamia. Private Crepin joined the Army last April, when he enlisted in the Army Service Corps, Mechanical Transport. Within a very short time he was despatched to some unknown foreign destination. In due course Mrs Crepin received an intimation of his whereabouts, and, naturally, the news of his death came as a shock to her of the most painful character. Private Crepin was a native of Dover, Kent, but for the past ten years he had resided in Suffolk. Before joining the Army he was an energetic and most useful special constable, and was attached to the Tuesday night section. He was a valued employee of Mr G W Henshall, of The Cornhill, for whom he acted as traveler. In consequence of his business connections, he was known throughout a wide area of the Eastern Counties, and we have no doubt the sad news of his untimely end will be received with sincere sorrow and regret by the numerous business and social friends he possessed. Mrs Crepin is left with a daughter, five years old, to mourn her loss, and deep sympathy is felt for her in the extremely sad blow which has befallen her.”

Many thanks to Lt-Col (Retd) L.A. (Steve) Stephens, for furnishing the above ‘Bury St. Edmund’s Free Press information.’
